Engage through Sensory Learning

Get ready for your heart to explode like never before when you discover the secret formula to parent/child engagement that will completely transform how your children connect and interact with you, even in the roughest, most frustrating moments.

WHY IS SENSORY PLAY SO IMPORTANT?

Children learn through play, an idea I think most parents already know. More specifically, It is through sensory play that a child begins to understand his environment through observation and experimentation. The child gains the ability to draw his own conclusions about the world. Sensory activities provide the foundation for all the cognitive skills necessary for children to succeed in school:

- Reading
- Writing
- Solving problems
- Understanding science
- Spatial awareness
- Pattern recognition.

To dive further into the amazing cognitive benefits of children utilizing the senses during play, check out the following articles: Exploring the Benefits of Sensory Play published by Goodstart Early Learning, Benefits of Sensory Play to Brain Development published by Parenting for Brain, and Cognitive Development and Sensory Play written by Kittie Butcher and Janet Pletcher Lansing and published by Michigan State University.

Painted Pinecones

A little paint, some brushes & pine cones. If you don't have pine cones, blocks, rocks, or any plastic animals/dinosaurs will suffice.

Colorful Pasta Creations

Place pasta in a bag. Add a little alcohol & as much food coloring as you want. Seal bag & squish it all together until the color is spread evenly. Empty onto paper towel & let dry. Make necklaces, artistic creations, and more!

Rainbow Sensory Bottle

Mix 1/3 cup hair gel with food coloring. Use sandwich bags to pipe it into the bottle, wiping the inside edges of any splatter as you go.
